To Whom It May Concern:XM Satellite is a perfect example of innovation spurred by private enterprise. Now I am able to elect to pay for radio instead of listening to radio for free. I elect to do so because of the variety of stations and music that satellite radio offers, the clarity of the signal wherever I go and for commercial free stations.

While I understand that traditional broadcasters are licensed to serve the public and are therefore subject to more restrictive regulations than satellite, most have done a pretty poor job of that. It is certainly no reason to grant them the right to dictate what satellite radio may or may not offer its listeners. This runs counter to the whole notion of free enterprise.

Respectfully submitted,
